HOME WORKSHEETS CHOOSE PREPOSITIONS TO COMPLETE SENTENCES Prepositions are a part of speech. They make connections within sentences to tell you where things are. Without them, you could quite literally get lost. You don't know to go across the road if the word across is missing. Learn more about prepositions and get a few fun preposition worksheets to enhance your learning. students working on preposition worksheet A preposition is a short word or a prepositional phrase that connects a noun or pronoun to a verb or adjective in a sentence. Prepositions usually come before a noun or pronoun and refer to information related to time, location or direction. They are very important because they help you understand sentences. Without prepositions, it would be impossible to know the relationship between nouns, verbs, phrases, and other such parts of a sentence. Examples of preposition words include: above, after, against, as, at, beneath, between, behind, by, during, except, for from, in, into, like, near, on, over, past, since, under, upon, with Perfect your knowledge of prepositions and their rules with the preposition worksheets listed below. In 1st and 2nd grade, students are just starting to understand prepositions and how they work within a sentence. Therefore, you want your worksheets to provide sentences that are clear and easy to understand. Additionally, they need to be something students can relate to. For example: Question: The bird flew over/under the tree. Answer: The bird flew over/under the tree. Since students know that birds fly in the sky, it's easy for them to choose the correct preposition for the sentence. With this worksheet, students are going to pick the correct preposition for each sentence from a word bank of prepositions. Additionally, since it's for lower grade levels, it uses 10 simple sentences. View & Download PDF While you want to keep it simple for upper elementary, 3rd and 4th graders should have a solid grasp of how prepositions work for direction, time and location. Not only are they being introduced to prepositional phrases, but they know the rules for prepositions. Therefore, you want a worksheet that offers more of a challenge to students. This PDF includes 20 sentences where students must find the different prepositions within each sentence. For a bit of an added challenge, some sentences include multiple prepositions for students to identify. View & Download PDF Preposition worksheets can be a powerful tool to add to your teaching arsenal. Explore a few different ways you can use prepositional worksheets to enhance learning. Use the worksheets to help students practice finding prepositions during a preposition lesson plan. Use them throughout the year as a refresher for students on what a preposition is. Make it fun by adding them as part of a group activity or using them as extra credit. Offer them as supplemental learning for substitute teachers visiting your classroom. Make a game using the prepositional phrases on the worksheets where you split the class into teams and have them call out the prepositions. Use the worksheets as a timed test to ensure student mastery. Using the worksheets as a guide, give students several sentences without prepositions and have them add their own. You can also customize these to work best for your classroom. Looking for more free worksheets and resources? Check out free diagramming sentence worksheets. Staff Writer Free Diagramming Sentences Worksheets Diagramming sentences is useful to develop a deeper understanding of grammar and parts of speech. It reinforces that adjectives and adverbs must accompany the words they are modifying, and subjects and verbs must agree. Practice diagramming sentences with these diagramming sentences worksheets, and you'll better understand how to break down a sentence into parts. Preposition Games Prepositions are one of the eight major parts of speech. They are a fairly important part of speech, as they help to determine the relationship between all of the other words in a sentence. Prepositions are often referred to as relationship word or direction words, since they dictate how the nouns, pronouns and phrases relate to each other or together in a sentence. Without prepositions, it would be very difficult to communicate meaning. For example, a sentence that says, "the book is the table" has very little meaning; but, a sentence that says "the book is on the table" suddenly makes a lot more sense with the addition of the word "on." A great way to teach prepositions is with the use of games. About this Worksheet: This prepositions worksheet directs the student to circle the preposition that best completes each sentence. This preposition worksheet gives good preposition recognition practice. The student will have to choose which preposition fits best in the context of the sentence. They will learn that a preposition shows position or direction and can introduce a prepositional phrase. Identifying prepositions that complete sentences helps a student master prepositions. This worksheet is suitable for 6th grade, 7th grade and 8th grade. Prepositions are words that express locations in time and space. They indicate relationships between nouns and other words. Learning prepositions is cornerstone to understanding the English language. Since prepositions are used quite frequently, it is worth taking the time to learn them. It's often said that one shouldn't end one's sentences with a preposition. Most grammarians now agree that this is hogwash. There is nothing wrong with ending a clause or sentence with a preposition, but it's often an indication that the preposition is redundant or unnecessary. For example: Where did you go to school at? This is grammatically incorrect, not because it ends with a preposition, but because the preposition is redundant. The example sentence should just say, Where did you go to school? The preposition at adds nothing to the sentence. It is unnecessary and should be removed. So while there is nothing wrong with ending a sentence with a preposition, it is often a signal that your preposition is redundant. Try to avoid constructing sentences with redundant prepositions. Here are some preposition worksheets and activities that I've developed over the years. I hope that these resources help you achieve your goals. Interesting Classroom Activities with Prepositions Here are a couple of interesting ways to teach prepositions: Practice Use: Hold a book above a desk. Ask students where the book is. Hold the book below the desk. Ask students to describe where the book is in relation to the desk. Move the book on the side of the desk, behind the desk, and in front of the desk, asking students to describe the location of the book in relation to the desk. Make the connection that prepositions are words that show location. Do a similar activity with their class period in relation to their lunch period to show how prepositions express time relations as well. The Poser Game: Have one student leave the room. Have another student volunteer get up and hold a crazy pose, like a statue. Students should use prepositions to describe, with as much detail as possible, how the student is positioned. Then, the student on the outside is invited back into the classroom. Students try to have the new arrival replicate the pose of the former based on their descriptions. Preposition Worksheets Preposition Worksheet | With the Police - This worksheet has 30 multiple-choice questions. In the first part, students read sentences and identify prepositions.
